Dental Practice Excellence was an amazing read! It teaches you what is important and what steps to take to grow your practice and better train your staff all at the same time. It provides a new outlook on what your crucial first steps should be, and where to start might surprise you. In the book Dental Practice Excellence, it is suggested that the silent killer for private dental practices is lack of competence. In order to meet the expectations of your patients (or prospective patients) you must exceed your expectations of yourself, along with your staff. To do that, Nottingham suggests thinking from the prospective of your patients; Given all of the other options open to me as a patient, why should I choose you as a dentist? In order to grow your business, you must be able to answer this, and more importantly, deliver on it, aka practice what you preach. It all comes down to training. When a potential patient (or existing) is looking for a dentist, the first person they are going to talk to is the business office team member who answers the phone. This person must be properly trained and knowledgeable about all operations of the business. They must be able to answer questions and engage with them and most importantly know how to ASK FOR THE APPOINTMENT. Recognizing the value in investing in your people is a huge step to growing your business. Some say their people are not interested and so it is a waste of money. Well, the answer to this problem is simple, you have the wrong people. You must find those who are motivated and want to make a difference. A highly trained staff will lessen the reliance on marketing and insurance reimbursement that some believe to be the only true way to grow your business. All of this and more can be learned with a quick and easy read of this book. I highly recommend to anyone who is trying to grow their practice and doesn't quite know which steps are crucial and what can be saved for later.
