Customer Reviews

Borch, a cartographic publishing company from Germany, makes tough, long-lasting maps with non-toxic, environmentally responsible lamination material.

I used this map during a 2-week vacation in August '16. I'd consult the map and write down my walking route, then clutch the paper (only) in my hand out on the streets. The method worked, so I will be using the Borch map of Berlin in that city this month.

Excellet

the wipe off feature makes this map good for planning and keeping track of where you've been. I preferred to carry a paper map with me while I was walking around town so I could conceal it better, but this large map was good for going over in the hotel rooms.

I used this map every day and it was fantastic!

I have about ten maps of Buenos Aires, some bought in Buenos Aires and some bought in the US. This is by far the best one. It has everything: subway stops, subway map, all streets very clearly written, colors that are easy to the eye, street list, etc. It would have been better if "Jorge Luis Borges" street weren't written as "JosÃ© Luis Borges" on the map, and although I get aggravated every time I see it (because I love Borges and I think such errors are ridiculous and unacceptable), it's still a better map than any other I've seen.

This is a really great map. I particularly like it because it is laminated, and it will last longer than those that are not. There is also enough detail for this size map.
